Robert Price is a 2009 graduate from Utica College of Syracuse where he earned his Doctorate in Physical Therapy. Upon graduating, Rob established firm footing marrying manual therapy and a biomechanical treatment approach. He spent his first five years practicing under expert clinicians exploring a multitude of approaches which led to an eclectic treatment model. Rob currently co-owns and operates CORE Physical Therapy with his partner, Glenn Brown, MMSc, PT, ATC, SCS, in Dover, Delaware. Rob's unique ability as a manual therapist combined with biomechanical analysis has led to superior results in the rehabilitation of the running population. He is working toward advanced certifications in manual therapy as well as an Orthopedic Clinical Specialist. Rob offers specialty services including video analysis of the healthy or injured runner with an emphasis upon improving running economy. His treatment paradigm strides to identify a biomechanical explanation why a specific tissue breaks down or becomes painful or injured. Other specialty areas also include, neck and spine care offering services including mobilization and manipulation in addition of various soft tissue techniques. Rob's personal history with running began at the early age of 10 where he began averaging a few hundred miles per year. During his college years he rekindled his relationship with running, participating in various races such as the annual Utica Boilermaker 15k and his most memorable race, a 200 mile relay in Vermont. His passion now lies in helping individuals realize their running goals and help them continue on their path to wellness.
